QUESTIONS

Answer ONE of the following 8 questions. The content of your submission must be no more than 2,500 words.

Q1. LIFE INSURANCE AND FINANCIAL ABUSE

The Parliamentary Joint Committee on Corporations and Financial Services is currently inquiring into the financial services regulatory framework in relation to financial abuse. The committee is due to report to the Parliament by October 2024. Terms of reference include:

- The effectiveness of existing legislation, common law, and regulatory arrangements that govern the ability of financial institutions to prevent and respond to financial abuse, including the operation of the Australian Securities and Investments Commission Act 2001, the Insurance Contracts Act 1984 and legislation and statutory instruments for superannuation; and
- Other potential areas for reform, such as prevention, protection, and proactive systems, including existing financial product design, emerging financial products, employee training, culturally appropriate responses and any other appropriate response, for example, mandatory reporting.

Super Consumers Australia has already told the Joint Committee that “On the whole, super funds are simply not prepared or incentivised to respond to financial abuse in line with best practice”.

Are life insurers’ faring any better?

Having regard to one or both of the above terms of reference, does the life insurance regulatory framework adequately address potential financial abuse? Identify any areas for improvement (for example with respect to ownership and contractual design of life products) and discuss your views on how such improvements can best be achieved/implemented.

Q2. GENETIC TESTING

The 2023 Australian Genetics & Life Insurance Moratorium: Monitoring the Effectiveness & Response (A-GLIMMER) report found that the existing moratorium continues to discourage consumers from participating in both established clinical genetic testing, which may identify a need for potentially life-saving treatment, as well as and medical research involving genetic testing.

To address these concerns Treasury released a Consultation Paper ‘Use of Genetic Testing results in life insurance underwriting’ in November 2023 which provided three options for regulatory intervention. The likelihood is that there will be a total or partial prohibition on the use of adverse genetic testing results by life insurers. Which option from the Treasury Consultation Paper do you consider best achieves the right outcome and why?

Q3. INNOVATION IN GROUP INSURANCE

The premise of group insurance in the Australian economy remains highly supported and valued. After all, it provides vital insurance to millions who would otherwise not likely seek cover. Last year, ASIC described it as “a built-in safety net for millions of Australians”. That said, it is fair to say that superannuation trustees remain under ongoing scrutiny by regulators in terms of value for money of their insurance offerings (see ASIC report 760, March 2023). Furthermore, the Association of Superannuation Funds of Australia (ASFA) reported in February of this year that its research identified a 36% decrease in the number of Australians insured for death and TPD benefits through superannuation.

Against these headwinds (and without disclosing any confidential commercial information), how can life insurers through innovation win these customers back and deliver better life insurance products for superannuation funds and their members? In your answer, please outline the core issues facing life insurers and trustees in delivering better products for superannuation funds and ways to improve the trustee/member insurance experience.

Q4. COST OF LIVING: ACCESSIBILITY AND AFFORDABILITY

In March 2024, APRA's Executive Director, Sean Carmody, delivered a speech in relation to the future of insurance in Australia. In that speech, Mr Carmody stated:

"Our community is facing serious cost-of-living stress and we are seeing levels of hardship across mortgage borrowers. Insurance premiums are rising and the "protection gap" is widening as some lines of insurance become harder to obtain, especially for those who cannot afford higher premiums or are simply unable to access suitable cover...."

The future of the insurance industry hinges on its response to these challenges, which means facing some tough questions:

Will everyone who needs insurance protection still be able to afford and access it in a decade or two, or will this essential product become a luxury?..."

How do you think the life insurance industry in Australia can respond to cost of living pressures and maintain its relevance in household budgets? If inflationary pressures remain in place long-term, what steps can the industry adopt to ensure that households continue to see value in their life insurance and not view it as a luxury product?

Q5. BRINGING ADVICE BACK TO LIFE INSURANCE

The Council of Australian Life Insurers (CALI) has recently welcomed the passage of the first tranche of the Federal Government's 'Delivering Better Financial Outcomes' reforms. The Bill aims to give Australians more choice when it comes to getting advice about their life insurance needs and reducing red tape. CALI CEO, Christine Cupitt, has highlighted that the Bill's passage is a positive step towards addressing the advice accessibility crisis in Australia.

Ms Cupitt has said "We want to see legislation that allows life insurers to provide simple advice on their own products, when customers ask them to".

What are the potential benefits and challenges of allowing life insurers to provide simple advice on their own products? Discuss the implications for improving access to advice, ensuring regulatory compliance, the impact on independent financial advisers, and maintaining consumer trust. Specifically, please also consider the impact such reforms will have on retail customers and what other changes can be made by the insurers to grow their base of retail customers.

Q6. CYBER-CRIME AND LIFE INSURANCE – PROTECTING OUR CUSTOMERS

As digital transformation rolls on, experts tell us that cyber threats and the prospect of being defrauded of significant sums of money increases significantly each year. Recently, the Federal Court of Australia delivered a widely publicised decision dealing with an AFCA Determination on scammers stealing a large superannuation balance, and there has also been increasing instances of highly sophisticated syndicates implementing fake death cover stings in foreign countries.

Generally it seems that banks spend a great deal of time and energy protecting their customers from cyber threats, but are life insurers doing enough to protect both themselves and their customers from cyber thieves? Discuss the nature and prevalence of fraudulent claims, trends emerging and the current state of the law. Please discuss how life insurers can best shield themselves and their customers from these ever growing cyber threats.

Q7. MENTAL HEALTH AND ACCESS TO LIFE INSURANCE

Despite advances over the last 20 years, there are mental health advocates who say unfair barriers still hinder persons with past histories of mental illness from obtaining life insurance cover. The counter view is that given the prevalence of working time lost in the community due to mental illness and the propensity for such illness to re-emerge, insurers underwriting life risk need to be ever vigilant when dealing with a past history of mental illness. They also point out that the ability to discriminate on the basis of sound actuarial/medical data is enshrined in various anti-discrimination legislation.

These opposing views seem so entrenched at times it is difficult to see if we are making progress on this issue and outdated perceptions on mental illness still seem prevalent.

Having regard to both sides of the argument, do you believe life insurers' approach to underwriting those with a past history of mental health issues is fair? Please explain your answer and in doing so, consider whether life insurers need to be more nuanced in their decisions and whether the underwriting process can be refined to obtain more relevant information. Finally, when mental health exclusions must be used, are they too broad and is there merit in finding some middle ground?

Q8. INSURANCE CLAIMS HANDLING

The duty of utmost good faith (DOUGF) is back in the spotlight after the recent decision by the Federal Court of Australia in ASIC v Zurich.

Despite ASIC's loss, ASIC Deputy Chair, Sarah Court, said it took on this case to "to clarify the steps that an insurer must reasonably take before avoiding an insurance policy on the basis of fraudulent non-disclosure. We believe this was an important case to bring given our view that it was appropriate for procedural fairness to be provided before avoiding a customer's insurance policy. ASIC enforcement action plays an essential role in testing legislation to ensure it affords consumers with appropriate protection".

Quite apart from the watchful eye of the regulator, life insurers' raison d'être is to deliver for their customers in a time of need. Despite this and the significant cultural changes that took place within the life insurance industry post the Hayne Royal Commission, figures from AFCA suggest that complaints are increasing.

Against this background, what steps can be taken by life insurers to not only enhance their claims handling frameworks to ensure the DOUGF is not breached but go beyond it? Do you think the revised LICOP 2.0 standards go far enough or are there further steps in the claims handling process that can be improved? Finally will lifting standards even higher in this regard turn around the negative customer sentiment which seems to be driving increased AFCA complaints? Please discuss all of this.
